

Content editor - regional languages | Role & responsibilities

India Development Review (IDR), founded as a nonprofit in 2017, is Asia's largest independent media platform that advances knowledge and insights on philanthropy and social impact. We publish cutting-edge ideas, lessons, and insights, written by and for the people working on some of India's toughest problems.

In 2022, we launched IDR Hindi with the aim of widening our reach and catering to a larger audience. And now we wish to make our content available in other regional Indian languages as well, starting with Bengali and Gujarati.

As a first step, we have identified IDR articles that will be translated into these languages using a translation tool, following which this translated draft will be reviewed by an editor fluent in both English and the concerned language.

What we are looking for

The editor—ideally someone with knowledge of and experience in the development sector—is expected to ensure that the intended meaning and essence of the original article is not lost, and so make language edits wherever necessary. They will not be required to make structural changes to the article. The focus should be on keeping the article as simple and reader-friendly as possible.

What we are offering

We will begin with 10 articles for each regional language, and the fee for each article would be as follows:

Up to 1000 words: INR 750

1000–1500 words: INR 1250

1500–2000 words: INR 1750

Above 2000 words: INR 2250

If you're interested in this role, send your CV and a brief cover note to cincy@idronline.org.